

In October 2024, BCNY announced that they were working on a new browser. A browser that was not going to replace their existing browser Arc but was going to be a new product, completely separate from it. It was going to be a browser that was easier to pick up and go, understandable for the average consumer, and AI driven. This ended up becoming Dia an AI powered web browser that tries to anticipate what you're going to do next. About a year ago Dia was taken out of beta and released to the public.

Josh Miller, CEO, Introducing the Initial Concept of Dia

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=E9yZ0JusME4>

Arc's tagline is* "A calmer, more personal internet"*. Arc was supposed to allow to customize the browser to be more to your liking. Hence the intense customizability in Arc (ex. boosts and themes). Another thing Arc had that was different from other browsers was its more out there, playful design. This unique design caught the eye of many people in tech which is part of the reason it became so popular.

Arc's Website

<https://arc.net>

Dia's tagline is* "A browser for your best work"*, focusing on the shift from a browser for your personal needs to one for your work. This idea has been with BNCY from the beginning. From Split View to Folders, Arc has always been aimed towards students. Dia expands on this concept through its agentic abilities which make working easier. Dia started off without any of Arc's unique features but gradually is adding more of them.

Dia for Students

<https://www.diabrowser.com/students>

One thing about Dia which is very noticeable when you switch from Arc is the surprising lack of customization. With only 8 different color options, Dia's sheer distinction from Arc's highly customizable themes. Dia's main focus seems to be its AI integration rather than making the browser adaptable to your preference. Overall Arc and Dia have 2 separate goals, focuses, and abilities.

Arc:

---

- Personalized
- Vibrant
- Bold

Dia:

---

- For Your Work
- AI Powered
- Minimal

Thanks for Listening!